

Late and Soon: A Novel

In Late and Soon, a host of characters confront their confusions in love. Claire, an art specialist at Sothebys, lives in a world of glamour and achievement but after attending an art opening, where she runs into the young man her husband had left her for five years earlier, she realizes that her broken heart has never truly healed. Claire begins to question herself, her past and her future, as does the younger man, Toby. For it turns out that Peter, her ex-husband, has left him, too. So begins a story set in the rarified but fast-paced world of art auctions and the cultural and social whirl of New York City. Late and Soon chronicles Claire's emotional course, as she puts together a sale of paintings that could make her career. She is captivated by one painting in particular that speaks to her; a James Tissot work titled The Widow, and is taken under wing by the painting's owner, an elderly, well-to-do society matron of the old school, who loves the painting too, and whose parting with it for reasons that Claire finds poignant especially regarding her own romantic longings.
