

Khin Myo Chit - Colourful Burma Part One

Khin Myo Chit (b:1915-1999) started her writing career in the 1930s with short stories for magazines and weekly journals, and later worked on the editorial staff of a weekly. Her pre-war years were busy, whatwith getting involved in the countrys struggle for independence against the British, free-lance writing and raising a family. This book is about a beautiful land of charming, hospitable people who always greet the visitor with a cheery smile. The smile instantly ripens into a hearty laugh, and in no time, host and guest are laughing together over a pot of plain tea and jiggy sweets. But pause here awhile, lest the author be charged with singing extravagant praises of her own country and people; make way for a few observations of foreign writers who are equally, if not more, generous with their sincere appreciation of our national traits and character. Just listen to this! He who has never known the close friendship of (to quote his exactly and faithfully) a Burman has never exercised his own maximum capacity for laughter and fun. This comes from one of the chief correspondents of a leading British newspaper John Walters who had covered many International Conferences and also witnessed tragic scenes of war and violence, foods and famine, and was one of the most widely travelled journalist in Britain. When I first published this book in 1976, I had intended to call it Beautiful Burma, but another foreign writer named Theophilus had already beaten me to it, and I had to be content with Colourful Burma. He too gave a glowing account of the country and people he admired. One of the most moving books that I have read on the subject is The Soul of a People by Fielding-Hall. He was unstinting in his praise of our people and I almost blush to repeat it. The Burmese Nation, as he wrote it, is the greatest nation in the world because it is the happiest. Perhaps the most sincere tribute to our spiritual ideals and aspirations as taught to us by our Lord Buddha was that paid by a prominent leader of the Christian Church, Bishop Bigandet in his writings which he published for all the world to know. Referring to Mangala Sutta he said, The Buddha has summed up almost all moral virtues in this Sermon humility, patience, gratitude, resignation, fortitude, consorting with the wise, shunning the foolish, studying the Dhamma, covering with the religious, to remain calm and serene, fearless and unshaken amidst the ups and downs of life, to keep ones eye ever fixed on the happy state of Neikban. I cannot but wonder at the humility of the man that rose above ones racial and religious consciousness and appreciated the commendable qualities in another nation.
