

The Blue

Derek may or may not deserve to be stalked by an unhinged ex-marine - hes not sure. He did kill the mans entire family in a car accident, and he may have been drinking, though thanks to the resulting coma he cant remember much about that day. And thats okay, because Derek is learning all about it from the district attorney as he explains to the jury why the young painter should go to prison. Prison isnt right now, though - it isnt breaking into his home, stabbing him, or kidnapping him at gunpoint. And managing his stalker would be much easier if Derek could see him coming. But, hes incapable of recognizing the man tormenting him, or anyone else. Cant even recognize his own face in the mirror. Since Derek woke up from his coma, hes been face blind: a rare condition that renders him unable to identify people by their appearances. Anyone in Dereks world of strangers could be his stalker. In this mind-bending thriller, the talented painter is pushed to a tipping point as his reality unravels at the hands of a madman.
