

FANTASY Fairytales: Princess (Prince and Princess erotica Book 3)

I swear, Genie, Bryant said after taking another swig of wine. I dont even know what this ones about. Nodding, the Genie took the bottle from Bryant and drank from it too. Yes, he said after swallowing. You said that already. But Bryant continued as if Genie didnt speak at all. One moment we were having fun in bed, then I go to the bathroomthe bathroom! For less than ten seconds! And when I come back out she was all upset and she was shouting that Ive really become an insensitive jerk and that I dont love her anymore, that shes become a mere habit to meGenie, I could have sworn I had just given her an orgasm minutes before, so how could she say those things? Huh? What else could she possibly want? The Genie made a noncommittal noise in response, which was more than enough encouragement for Bryant. I just cant figure out where all of this is coming from, you know? Is she is she menopausal or something? Shes too young for that, but what if? I hear you, brother, was the Genies only reply. Do you understand me, Genie? What Im going through? I love Layla, really, I do but I just dont get her anymore. The Genie grunted again, which Bryant took to mean that he should go on and let it all out. While Bryant babbled on, repeating most of the things hed already said, the Genie whispered with a devilish gleam in his eyes, I hear you, brother loud and clear. After draining the bottles hed brought with him, Bryant became so smashed that he judged it best to summon the magic carpet instead of simply walking up to his room. The last thing he could remember was falling face-forward on the carpet and ordering it to bring him up to the bedroom where his wife was sleeping. Earlier that night, Layla had told Bryant to get out and sleep with the camels for all she cared, but hed completely forgotten. He only knew that he wanted to lie down beside her. The carpet must have gone on through the open windows and deposited him safely inside because he woke up on the big soft bed, wrapped in fragrant silks. He opened his eyes only to have them blinded by the sunlight coming in from outside. Bryant raised a hand to block it. Still groggy, he noticed something incomprehensible about his hand. Before he could investigate further, however, he was distracted by the scream coming from outside. What kind of person lets out that kind of racket so early in the morning? And right outside his window too! Monumentally pissed, Bryant stumbled from the bed intending to shut the windows and perhaps the person up, but the strangest sight met him. Given his history with strange things, where a genie and a flying carpet happened to be the least of it, labeling something as being the strangest was really saying a lot. But it was true: there are a few things stranger than seeing himself for someone who looked identical to him sitting panic-stricken atop a magic carpet floating two yards away. When the other Bryant saw him too, the screaming became worse. What Bryant began, intending to ask what was going on, but he didn't need to. Just hearing himself say that single word was answer enough because his voice sounded distinctly feminine. Was there something wrong with his ears? There was, as it turned out. For that matter, there was something wrong with his entire body, too. Like how it was not his own. So that's why it felt like he'd shrunk! He wasn't imagining it after all. After that first dazed thought, Bryant became clear-minded again and remembered Layla's current predicament. For who else would it be, occupying his body? He had hers. Bryant ordered the carpet to come into the room and deposit its cargo safely. Alighting shakily, Layla looked into her husband's eyes and he to hers or were they actually looking at their own eyes using the other one's lens? Thinking the same thoughts, they hit the ceiling of how-much-they-could-take at the same time. As one, the pair drew a deep breath and sh
