

Bridging homes and schools: Tools for family involvement in multilingual communities

The number of children in United States schools who speak limited or no English is continually increasing. Bridging Homes and Schools spans the gap between teachers and non-English speaking family members. Here are Tools for family involvement in multilingual communities. Educators quickly and easily transmit a number of important messages to students and their families. They are designed to build social relationships, orient new students, and promote academic achievement. Labels of encouraging words and phrases that attach to students work. Words of encouragement in a students home language will demonstrate that his/her culture, language, and presence are anticipated and welcomed. The student and his/her family will in turn gain a sense of acceptance and comfort in a new learning environment.
