

The Hutterite Community Cookbook

Rear cover notes: This collection contains the current cuisine of one of North America's traditional communal groups. Many of the recipes have been handed down for generations. Food preparation is serious business in a Hutterite colony. Some 85 to 100 people, hard-working adults as well as active children, come to the communal dining room for three meals each day. While their principle of simplicity influences them to create basic and robust dishes, the Hutterites fill their tables plentifully and then enjoy what they eat. Here are original recipes in large quantities for Hutterite dining halls, printed next to adaptations of each recipe for average-sized households. Included also are weekly menus, menus for special occasions, notes on the role of food among the Hutterites and a brief introduction to these unusual communities.
