Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: ...they suppose that Rice might have a good claim for the intervention of the chancery court, if he had filed his cross-petition within thirty days from the time the goods were removed from the rented premises. We do not perceive that the removal of the goods from the demised premises affect in any way the rights of Rice. Hirsh was a bona fide purchaser of the goods, and, in his hands, they were not subject to be attached by Rice, whether they were on the premises, or within thirty days from a removal therefrom. Hirsh was a purchaser under the decree of the court, and by this proceeding in court, and under the decree of the court, Rice was precluded from going against the property sold, and for that reason gives him a right to demand of the assignee of the goods the payment of his rent from the money produced by a sale of the property, which the proceeding in the chancery court had precluded him from attaching to pay them. In the case at bar the estate was being administered in the chancery court, just as was the estate of Harris being administered in said court by virtue of his assignment.
