

Verses and Notes: Copygraphical, Distorical, Antiquarian, Miscellaneous (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Verses and Notes: Copygraphical, Distorical, Antiquarian, Miscellaneous While photographing in Standish Church last July, I had the good fortune to meet the author of this little book. That he was a keen antiquary and a clever draughtsman, was evident from the note-book he showed me. That he was a poet as well, and a postman to boot, I was not prepared to hear. To find a man with his engagements so diligent a student of local history, and so careful an observer and recorder of all pertaining to past times, is indeed a pleasant surprise. For research into original documents his leisure has not sufficed, so that if errors are found in the antiquarian articles they are probably for the most part those of the authorities from whom he has had perforce to copy. May the perusal of both poetry and prose, put together of necessity under circumstances of some difficulty, induce others with ampler opportunities than the author, to devote more of their time to the pursuit of like studies - sidelights on the history of their native land!
